

Want Improved Agency Collaboration? Call Hatch!

Written by Travis Erickson, Aging and Adult Services

Wednesday, 19 November 2008 17:00 - Last Updated Monday, 23 March 2009 15:15

Vernal- Grant Hatch is one of the many dedicated Adult Protective Services (APS) caseworkers that spend their days providing community supports to vulnerable adults. Hatch was one of the first APS caseworkers to work in Daggett, Duchesne, and Uintah counties.

He has since spent several years working with youth at Juvenile Justice Services and for various community volunteer agencies. Hatch recently returned to APS. His willingness to engage the community regarding the enhancement of services for vulnerable adults and his personal dedication to seeking the best possible resolutions for his clients has given the community refreshed confidence in the agency. Within the first year of Hatch's return to APS, community referrals and local agency collaboration have increased to double their previous levels. Hatch continues to focus his efforts on educating the community, empowering clients and improving his skills to serve some of Utah's most vulnerable citizens.